Excerpt: . . . on my arm, and to cry in my ears Get up! get up! to announce his presence. I opened my eyes, and sat up, bewildered. At this moment, through the narrow and lofty window of my cell, I saw on the ceiling of the neighboring corridor --- the only sky granted me -- that yellow tint in which the dwellers in the darkness of prison-walls learn so well to recognize as the sun. I love the sun! The weather is fine, said I to the jailor. He remained a moment without replying to me, as if uncertain whether it was worth while to waste any words on me. Then, with an effort, he muttered roughly, -- That may be. I remained motionless, my spirit still half asleep, my lips smiling, my eye fixed upon that mild, golden reflection, which mottled the ceiling. We have...
